Checkpoint 7  Dirk - Portfolio (WK10)  11-11-2024

Barrios Peña, Fabiana F.  17 days ago

Overall portfolio is heading on the right direction, its starting to come together. Dirk said to add more personality on the pages and add decorations that match each project/page because its looking quite bland right now. He also suggested to add a table of contents (as well as the navigation bookmarks I'm planning on adding) at the start to give the user an overall idea of what they're getting into, and number the pages to give it more of a magazine feel.

    Write a summary of what you discussed with your teacher...

I showed Guido my progress so far on my portfolio. Overall structure is good. He said to not be afraid to use several pages and expand when needed, sometimes blank space is good, although right now the content doesn't look crammed. He pointed out detailed pictures with a lot going on, like mood boards, stylescapes,etc.. may be hard to see so I will just add a hover effect to make the images bigger. For the links in the Learning Outcomes section he suggested not to put the full URL and just link it with the title of what it is so the page looks cleaner and more neat.

I spoke to Pim about my portfolio and he said it was a really cool idea. As for the navigation/bookmarks he really liked the text on the side and didn't mind it being tilted. As for content, overall structure was good for the projects and the Learning outcomes sections should be in general not project focused. and add a small reflection as well at the end. Links should also be included here not only in the projects (Projects linked between text and LO can just be a list).

Jan was glad to see I was finally working with actual tools like affinity designer and not figma. For the layout I need to use like a grid to align all the content and it looks more cohesive. He suggested to use a Sans/serif typeface for the titles to make it look more modern and Flipboard app to check for inspiration on how to fix my navigation issue as the icons i have set in the bookmarks not all of them are obvious so it may confusing for user experience. Overall he likes the idea of it being a magazine and being able to flip through the pages

I talked to Guido about Navigation issues regarding my current portfolio designs. Specifically, he liked the bookmark idea and agreed with me that the horizontal text wasn't the best as it was hard to read without breaking your neck. He thought the icons was the best option and suggested to write the words just when the marks are hovered. As for content, put the main information in the website and any additional details that aren't as important include them in the document linked.

Main points from Dirks feedback is to be aware of readability when creating the layout, I need to figure out some kind of navigation bar whether its within the magazine or on the blank spaces beside it. He also proposed having one magazine for each project and make it like a "library". Design wise, very nice and clean styling.

As for the content of the magazine pages, I was worried it was too much text and suggested I put little text and the rest of details add them onto a document and link that, dirk was NOT a fan. Finally, i was told to check the code for the "flipping pages" animation and see if it was build by images (which he doesn't recommend because its harder to make changes) or if I can add interactive elements.

I showed Jan initial ideas for my portfolio. A magazine/Journal like that flips through the pages. Immediately scratch the handwriting font as its not legible (could leave it for the titles because the bigger font size makes it readable). As I'm leaning towards a more minimalistic and classic design, like a magazine, use Serif. Also do NOT use figma to create the designs and instead use Adobe tools, specifically Indesign for layout and creating purposes. Another alternative that could be useful to look into is Affinity Designer as i can use it on the ipad as well with the pencil which gives me certain liberty when designing. Jan enjoyed my idea overall and says it was very creative.
